observing in your paper of the 20th inst an indirect attack on my integrity by Mr. Richard Bland, I have to remark that he had no occasion to trouble the public with his caution! The most advisable way for him to have proceeded would have been to have paid the balance due to me, as per account, current lately delivered to him in which all his credits, with the note he refers to, are stated, and which note, from his refusing to have a matter in dispute between us to arbitration, is held as a collateral security for the balance due me. And I would further observe, that Mr. Bland has no receipt from me which does not specify either at bottom, or on the back of it, that I have yet an open account against him.
