cells; we sustained much injury fails and rigging, but lost none crew. April 4th was attacked by other privateer, a ship of 18 guns 141 men, which we fought half an hour when I had the mortification to see my gun. but one, on the side of my enemy, dismounted; and it being impossible to bring the other into action in consequence of which I was obliged to surrender, very much against my will.

The Harmony, mounted with 12 guns, and 26 men, was wounded in this action, and died at St. Cruz, where we were carried in, and the whole crew were left put on shore. Being stripped of every thing, our situation became very miserable. Finding no American vessels there, I applied to the French for provisions for my people, who granted us the allowance of a quarter of a pound per day, for each man; but this support was withdrawn after 9 days when applied to Mr. Calmar, consul at Port Oratava, who arrived the day before from Ireland, but I did not even an answer from him. I petitioned the Spanish governor in our behalf, but could draw no assistance from that quarter. The little money I had was expended; and our situation became desperate. We therefore took a resolution to repossess ourselves of the Harmony, as she lay moored under the muzzles of the heavy guns of the fort, though her top masts were struck, and no provisions or water on board; in consequence of which it was agreed, that I should remain behind, and join the mate and crew, (who were to proceed to lat. 27, and 40 leagues W. of Fernand) with provisions, &c. having secured passage for that purpose.

Accordingly, on Sunday the 18th April 13 three fellows embarked in the cockpit of the day on board two American vessels then lying in the harbor, having with them...
